Using IBM compilers I can compile code which works on the z/OS (PA-RISC platform) without any problems, I was wondering if there is a way to change the language used by the compiler to include the rules of the IBM Assembler? If it is not possible, could you recommend me a language that is similar to the IBM Assembler language? I think that the options that I have are: C/C++ Pascal Delphi A: I think you can do all you want to do with C. If you are building an old IBM mainframe (PASOS, etc) or a modern z/OS VSE mainframe, then the Assembler language is very similar to C and you should be able to get everything you want to do. If you are building an IBM AS/400 it's quite a different animal. If you have a modern z/OS VSE mainframe, and you want to use IBM mainframe tools, then you can use C, or if you want to use an IBM licensed language, you can use C. I don't know if that includes Assembler. If you have an older IBM mainframe, or an earlier generation mainframe, then you would need to compile for those assembly languages, and use those tools, or the z/OS VSE translator which is very similar to the old IBM tools. e24f408de9
