From ZFC "This book", in page 240, the author states What can be said about the cardinality of a model M of ZFC with respect to the number of types over the closed ordinals in M ? Why are the cardinals of models of ZFC of the same cardinality? A: They are not, that's why we have choice in our theories. Consider the model you have constructed (that would be the construction of the standard model SM^ω) and some other model $SM'S$. In $SM'S$, if $ST'S$ is some very strong theory, then SM' models TS means that every element of $SM'S$ is a model of TS . But it might be that there is an element Sb in $M'S$ which is not a model of TS . So, it might be that $SM'S$ is different from your model $SM'S$. However, there is a version of choice that says that we can always find a model of TS which contains Sb . (I'm not quite sure how to rigorously define what "very strong" means here. Think about the consistency strength of arithmetic relative to PA , or things like that.) \bullet This version of choice is not equivalent to the axiom of choice, but often it's thought of as a form of choice. \bullet But note, we do not have choice in all models of ZFC. For example, if $SM'S$ is a model of $SZFC + GCHS$, then $SM'S$ has a proper class of sets, so there is a set Sb that is not even a member of $SM'S$. The axiom of choice requires us to restrict our attention to models where Sb is a set.
